

The Autonomous University of Madrid (UAM) was founded in 1968 and has two campuses, Cantoblanco and the Medical School, in northern Madrid. The Autonomous University of Madrid is organized into seven schools, which include: Arts and Philosophy, Teacher Training and Education, Economics and Business Studies, Sciences, Law, Psychology and Medicine, and the Polytechnic, as well as several services buildings; a sports complex; Music and Languages; University Residences and a Postgraduate Centre.

The campus has excellent connections with the city center, including a train station and a direct line to Puerta del Sol. All of this makes the Autonomous University of Madrid an ideal place for foreign students to experience life in one of Europe's most vibrant cities.

The University features libraries and IT rooms at all the centres, as well as two separate library buildings (Sciences and Humanities), an Agreements and International Relations Office, a guide for foreign students and a comprehensive Reception Centre.

UAM is among the best Spanish universities according to different international rankings. It is a Campus of International Excellence under the UAM+CSIC programme; a recognition based on its research talent and prestige and its association with the Spanish National Research Council (CSIC) which has given teaching, research and transfer capacities an enormous boost.
